

Hearts for Home Care

A BAYADA program supporting quality home health care.

Hearts for Home Care 101

Home care clients and caregivers have stories to tell—thousands of them. Each story can help encourage public officials and the media to give more support to home health care. We just need to get more stories in front of the right people.

That's where Hearts for Home Care comes in.

Local, state, and federal public officials frequently make decisions that affect the home care industry and its ability to serve clients. Hearts for Home Care makes sure your voices are heard when home care decisions are being made.

Through Hearts for Home Care, clients, families, and employees come together to tell their stories to legislators and regulators, in an effort to communicate how policy decisions affect all of us.

How Hearts for Home Care Makes an Impact

While legislators have staff members who study important issues related to home care, they also rely on constituents like you for information. The best way to inform your elected official about the importance of home care is to share with them your personal stories about the impact it has on your life.

By sharing your story, you put a face on home care and give it a voice. When you share your story, it helps policymakers to remember that when they make a decision about home care it affects real people.

There are many ways to share your experiences and help lawmakers better understand home care. Every time you send an email or write a letter to your legislator, or attend a Legislative Action Day, you are telling your story. The chart to the right shows the various ways Hearts for Home Care members can tell their stories.
